A Day at the Market with Maria.

It is a sunny morning, and Maria, a short and cheerful woman, leaves her small, warm, and cozy house. She lives in a quiet, colorful neighborhood where everyone knows each other (Suba). Maria has curly brown hair that bounces as she walks quickly down the narrow streets on the way at the market.

Inside the market, she sighs and says aloud" Good riddance, at last, I got here, and she sees Mr. Santorini, the local baker. He is of average height, an average man with a deep voice. Even though he looks a little rough, he is always kind. He rarely smiles at Maria, his round face and big hands showing how hard he works to bake the town's favorite bread.

Next to him is Laura, a small, gentle woman with blond hair. She sells bright flowers and carefully arranges them with her soft hands, she is so talented at doing so, Her green eyes are always calm and peaceful as she works.

Maria keeps walking and runs into Kevin, the local farmer. Kevin is tall and thin, with tanned skin from working outside. His black hair is a bit messy, and his black eyes are full of fun. Kevin always has a happy smile and makes everyone laugh with his jokes and gestures on his face.

Near the end of the market is Luna, an older woman who sells homemade jam. She has gray curls and wears a blue apron. Martha's face is wrinkled and she often looks serious, but she is always very caring and helpful with her customers.

Maria's basket is almost full of bread, flowers, and jam by lunchtime. She smiles as she leaves the market, thinking about the friendly people who make the town special, however, she thinks that something is missing to carry in her basket.
