

MULTIPLE CHOICE

That's the Ticket

by J. Robbins

"This is crazy!" muttered Timon as he rubbed his hands together to warm them. His friends Cato and Dabney rolled their eyes at him.

"You've been saying that for hours," Dabney replied. She pulled her wool cap down to protect her ears from the biting wind.

"If we want to get tickets for the Evil Robot Theory concert, we'll have to endure a little hardship," said Cato.

"I think the box office is opening!" Timon said excitedly. "Finally, we can go someplace warm." The line started to move forward quickly, and the three friends were pushed and shoved from all directions.

"Hey, those people are cutting in line ahead of us!" shouted Dabney angrily. "They can't do that!"

"There are too many people here!" Cato said worriedly. "What will we do if they run out of tickets before we get up there?"

"Oh no!" exclaimed Timon. "They just put the 'sold out' sign in the box office window."

"You can't be serious!" Cato groaned.

"Let's just go up there anyway," suggested Dabney. "We've been freezing out here for six hours; another ten minutes won't kill us." As the three friends finally approached the window, a thick snowfall began to blanket the sidewalk.

"Could this day get any worse?" Timon groaned.

"Do you have any more tickets for Evil Robot Theory?" Cato asked the box office attendant. She smiled at him through the thick glass window.

"We sure do," she told him. "All of our other concerts have sold out, but we still have five tickets left for that one." Dabney and Timon let out cheers and hugged each other as Cato quickly paid for the tickets.

"This is great!" said Dabney.

"Everything was worth it!" Timon agreed happily. "I'd risk frostbite for a great band like Evil Robot Theory!"

"Let's go get some hot chocolate to celebrate!" cheered Cato. The three friends sloshed through the snow with their hard-won tickets clutched tightly in their hands.

A long time ago, there lived a woman named Roro Anteng. She was blooming beauty and had attracted the attention of an evil giant. Because the evil giant possessed extraordinary magical powers, Roro Anteng dared not reject the giant's advances when he proposed to her. Roro thought of a plan to get away from the marriage without offending the giant. In order to get her hand in marriage, the giant had to fulfill her wishes.

Roro then concocted a difficult request in hopes that the giant did not have the power to fulfill it. She had asked him to make her a sandy desert in between the mountains in one night and before the break of dawn.

Unfortunately for her, the giant magically and swiftly began to work his powers and was near completing her wishes. The fast thinking Roro Anteng quickly thought of an idea to disrupt the completion, she made all sorts of noises that woke up the roosters. The roosters began to crow bringing dawn in.

On hearing the rooster's calls, which signalled the break of dawn, the giant was shocked for having failed his task. Frustrated, he threw the coconut shell that he used to dig the desert, the shell fell to the ground beside Mount Bromo, forming what is now known as Mount Batok (coconut shell). The sandy plain was to form the Tengger caldera.
