They need to learn a lesson!

Just 'drying his car'

Who do you think you are?

Reuters News Service

AMSTERDAM - Dutch police confiscated the car and driver's license of a man caught speeding who said he was trying to dry his car after he had washed it.

The 27-year-old was stopped in Amsterdam driving at 68 mph, about 31 mph over the speed limit, police said.

"Because he did not have his driver's license with him, his clean car was confiscated until he produces it," a police spokeswoman said.

USA- Two teenagers were arrested for damaging their school building yesterday. Windows in the building were broken and painted.

The police said the community would not put up with vandalism of this kind. The teenagers are too young to go to jail, but the police hope the punishment they receive will be serious enough to teach them a lesson.

A woman woke up over the weekend to find a man she didn't know climbing into her bed, according to police.

Eva Olson, 40, said she felt her bed move and heard the man say he wanted to talk to her, according to police.

Olson didn't know William O'Dell, 48, but O'Dell allegedly told police he knew Olson because she was a bartender. He said he'd stopped by her house to visit.

Olson asked O'Dell to leave, then showed him out the door without incident.

Police said they found O'Dell at his home, smelling heavily of alcohol. He was jailed and charged with criminal entry.
