HEALTH

When you go to A a new doctor, you are likely to hear the same questions that you've answered hundreds of times before. 'Do you take any medication? Are you allergic to anything? Have you ever broken a bone or <sup>1</sup> _____ your shoulder?'

Actually, I had lots of accidents when I was a child. For example, when I was 10, I had to spend a month in bed after a bad fall. My mother blamed herself and would repeat, 'If you hadn't climbed that tree, you <sup>2</sup> _____ two ribs.' She became overprotective after the accident. She was always worried about my health, and I knew that it <sup>3</sup> _____ her heart every time I got ill or injured. That didn't change my behaviour, though.

I don't have any children, but if I <sup>4</sup> _____, I wouldn't try to protect them from all possible dangers. It never works. And I think it is the <sup>5</sup> _____ of physical activity that is more dangerous for most people nowadays.

READING

8 Read the texts. For questions 1–4 choose the correct option A–D.

Text 1

With all of the advances in medical science, you would think that humans would be healthier than ever. This is especially true in countries where access to the latest therapies is easily available. So why do people seem to be suffering more and more from allergies and food-related illnesses? You may wonder if this is because people think too much about their health, but the numbers say otherwise. According to the World Health Organization, asthma has increased by a surprising amount, and about four per cent of the US population has a food allergy. This has everything to do with the way we live in today's mostly urban world. Very young children's bodies can't fight infections until they have to deal with bacteria, the thing which causes disease. Their first cold or ear infection trains the body to fight the next one. It turns out that people who grow up in clean urban environments have less ability to fight germs because they don't come across them. Children who grow up on farms, around animals, or in families with many children have a lot more contact with germs. As a result, their bodies are better able to cope, and they are less likely to become allergic.

We may have to rethink our attitude towards germs. It might be better to let children get down in the dirt, and to stop using germ-killing chemicals in our homes. If we want to slow down the increase in allergies, maybe we need to get a little dirty.

- 1 According to the writer, the increase in allergies
- A is less than people might think.
  - B is not being researched enough.
  - C has no known explanation.
  - D is quite dramatic.
- 2 The writer suggests that children who grow up in agricultural areas
- A are generally healthier.
  - B tend to get sick more often.
  - C have not come across some illnesses.
  - D are more likely to become allergic.

Text 2

As a child, I was pretty fearless. I used to climb trees, walk through overgrown fields and – maybe foolishly – see how many bees I could catch in a single jar. This idiotic activity became a fun game among friends. The person with the fullest jar won, and then we'd let the bees go and watch them fly away. Of course we got stung once or twice, but that was just part of the game.

The first time I reacted to a sting was when I was hiking with my family through some woods. I accidentally stepped into a wasps' nest. I got several stings, and — as my mother describes it — I almost immediately began to go red and swollen. Evidently my face looked like a basketball, and the last thing I remember is fighting to catch my breath as my throat began to close.

I was very lucky. A passing couple, one of whom had a bee allergy, immediately recognised the symptoms. The woman gave me an injection of epinephrine, which she always carried with her in case of an allergic reaction. They then phoned an ambulance. The next thing I knew I was waking up in hospital with my family around me, all of them looking extremely relieved. And I had a sense of thankfulness which has stayed with me.

The lesson? Allergies can develop over time, so don't assume you can't react to something just because you haven't before. And always be prepared.

3 The writer mentions the bee-catching competition because

- A it shows how generally careless he was.
- B it proves that he was not aware of being allergic.
- C it illustrates the types of games he and his friends enjoyed.
- D it is one of his best memories.

4 Overall, the writer's message is that

- A children should be better protected from risks.
- B it is best to be prepared for the unexpected.
- C there is little you can do to prevent a tragedy.
- D the natural world should be treated with caution.
