Read the text below about the early history of purple dye and then answer the questions that follow.

Phoenician purple dye

[1] The seafaring Phoenicians of the 12th century B.C. were in love with the purple colour. They lived in what are now Lebanon and Tunisia and bravely sailed to faraway lands to sell their wood, precious metals, and leather. Also, they were the only people who sold purple dye!

[2] This purple dye was so popular that the people of Greece came to think of the Phoenicians when they thought of the purple colour. In fact, the word 'Phoenician' comes from the Greek language. It is a word that means 'the purple colour' or 'a person who sells purple dye'.

[3] The Phoenicians discovered that a particular type of snail had a substance that could make a vibrant purple dye. Cloth soaked in this substance and dried in the sun turned a rich purple color. One snail would give one or two drops of this substance. Because it is very expensive to make this dye, only the royalty and the very rich people could put on purple clothes.
