

Depression

Recent research suggests that there might be some kinds of _____ (relate) between the place where people live and the likelihood of them suffering from depression at some time in their _____ (live).

Depression is higher in richer countries than in _____ (develop) ones.

Another study provides _____ (evident) of higher _____ (depress) rates in some countries than in others? Perhaps people feel more _____ (content) in _____ (compete) countries such as the United States where the pressure to succeed is so great?

The lack of sunlight may also offer an _____ (explain) for the higher depression rates in northern Europe in _____ (compare) with southern Europe. The fact that families tend to be less _____ (support) in northern European countries may also play a role. Many experts do not find these explanations very _____ (satisfaction).

Until further studies are conducted it would be _____ (advise) to treat them as anything more than _____ (speculate).