

		Britain	USA	Canada
Meeting	Greeting	keep distance with a firm handshake, use subdued body language a moment of social bonding at the start Business cards			appreciated to have business cards (for French businesses)
	Behaviors		evaluate performance based on level of participation avoid misunderstandings caused by inappropriate language choice between English and French Business lunches	short business lunches (not popular as they used to be)
	Punctuality	important	important	important Work ethics		employment based on efficiency, abilities, and contribution better work-life balance influenced by the work ethics of early settlers keep a distance for Anglophone, but more expressive for Francophone keep distance with a firm handshake, no physical contact like hugging avoid sloppy and inappropriate behaviors or interruption when the boss is talking avoid excessive loudness, sense of humor, over-familiarity, or even politeness digital exchange by a smartphone and a LinkedIn profile business cards, often in black and white, with a simple design a quick start (or a few French words if working with the French) an exchange of pleasantries at the start acknowledge others' points and, if necessary, agree to disagree respect everyone's opinions regardless of their position business lunches (more popular) but not for serious discussions little favoritism in business culture, success achieved by themselves influenced by a love for alcoholic drinks business discussion during breakfast, lunch and dinner competitiveness, success not gained at the expense of others influenced by the respect of merit and belief in equality

"work to live" culture

"live to work" culture

		Britain	USA	Canada
General attitude		rather formal style (age differences and status are also a determinant), with some modern familiarity
Communication	Style	less direct, more likely to require subtext
	Politeness		more open with a positive twist
	Taboos		safe topics: sports, family, hobbies, and pets	polite, almost to a fault (but shopkeepers not overly friendly or aggressively present)
Negotiation styles		deferential, indirect, affable, and relaxed little familiarity with patience little respect for the "hard sell" or a "glitz and blitz" attitude Friendship		a clear distinction between acquaintances, co-workers and friends generally collegial, but with expected respect toward senior colleagues (rank earned by achievements) informal style (boundaryless and flatter organization, regular social events) strong polite language ("please," "thank you," and "sorry!" heard everywhere) directness over politeness and diplomacy, a bit blunt to the Europeans more direct, often perceived more literally less direct to avoid being offensive or causing conflicts taboos: remarks about race, age, gender, or sexual orientation taboos: religions, (for sex and money, it depends) likely to use dry humor likely to be modest and respectful an unhurried feel exercise great patience reasonable, pleasant and goal-oriented (win-win situation) informal, cordial, and direct, perhaps a bit boastful willing to engage in a competitive bargaining process (hard-sell) not fond of aggressive selling techniques a deep or more superficial friendship, based on a common interest low maintenance and guilt free, less likely to rely on a friend for help