Vocabulary Activities STEP II: Sentence Level

Rational means "reasonable, sensible, or logical." Likewise, rationally means "sensibly or logically." A rationale is a reason to do something. These are usually used in positive or unemotional contexts.

Decisions about how to use public money must be made rationally, with careful consideration given to many criteria.

The verb to rationalize means "to find reasons to explain why you have done something." It is used in situations where there probably is not a good reason, but the person is trying to pretend there is.

Although some art experts find animal displays unimpressive, they rationalize them by arguing that they increase interest in "real" art.

C. Read this essay discussing the author's frustration with the public art selection process. In your notebook, summarize the reasons the author gives for his opinion. Use different forms of rational in your summary. Discuss your summary in a small group. How many forms of rational was your group able to use?

One reason that public art is so terrible is that the entire process is controlled by idiotic bureaucrats and political appointees, many of whom are completely ignorant about art. Because public art offices are part of local government, poor artistic works are often chosen by someone with a low position who justifies his or her choice by saying it was politically necessary.

The selection of projects to receive state funding is done by a committee whose members are rarely selected using sensible criteria. Many members of the committee do not have an ongoing commitment to public art and don't have the education needed to logically consider the merits of different works. Some members do not see the value of "art for art's sake." They give an explanation of their choices based on whether they think the art will help the local economy.

Artists whose pieces are not chosen are often disappointed because they don't understand the reason their work was rejected.

D. Look at these arguments for and against animal art displays, such as the Cow Parades (discussed on page 35), that have been popular in recent years. Restate each idea in your notebook, using the word in parentheses. Then write a paragraph that expresses your own opinion. Try to use as many target words as possible in your work. Be prepared to debate this issue in class.
