Nowadays, parents' time for their children is limited. Alterations to both parents and children's routines are responsible for this trend, and in my opinion, children will be heavily affected compared to adults.

The fact that parents are now spending less leisure time with their children is attributed to the following reasons. To begin with, parents sometimes work overtime to deal with their workload, or any unforeseen problems that may come up. Sometimes they may be too worn out when they get home that they lack the energy to deal with their children's high energy levels or their needs. Furthermore, due to higher expectations, many parents have their children enrolled in extra classes. This means that the kids' schedule may be filled even on the weekends, which limits the time they interact with their parents.

Personally, this development will have negative impacts on children's mental well-being and social life. First, when children are compelled to spend most of their time studying, they can be under immense pressure from parents or from academic results. Over time, children can even develop mental health issues such as anxiety and depression. In fact, there have been many reports of children contemplating self-harm or suicide because they are unable to cope with stress. Second, the lack of guidance from parents often leave children's social skills under-developed. This makes it harder for them to navigate through social situations or tackle problems by themselves. In some cases, they can be vulnerable to negative influences from society such as violence and vandalism.

To conclude, the main reasons why parents do not spend much of their free time with their children are demands from work and extracurricular activities. This trend is likely to affect children more in terms of their mental health and social skills.

Nowadays, it is reported that parents are not spending enough time with their children. There are multiple reasons for this, and out of the two parties, the issue tends to affect children more than parents.

The first reason why parents neglect their children is their hectic schedules . Many parents currently work more than one job, and they also have to socialize and network with friends and colleagues. Some even have to take care of their elderly parents. Children are also busy studying, hanging out with friends, or dating. Another reason could be that both parties have differences in viewpoints. Parents can be condescending towards their children, resulting in banning them from doing things they are interested in, such as getting tattoos, dyeing hair, or wearing revealing clothes . On the other hand, children also lack the patience to communicate with their parents respectfully. As a result, children and parents actively avoid spending time with one another.

Although this negligence affects both parents and children, children are still getting the more negative end. Children naturally look up to and copy their parents. As a result, when parents do not spend enough time with their children, children can lack communication and other soft skills, become more distrustful, or treat their future children in the same way. Moreover, children, especially teens, are more emotionally sensitive than parents. This negligence can be detrimental to their mental state. For example, this lack of care can easily imprint in their minds that their parents do not love them, they are worthy of being isolated, and that they cannot find solace in the home. Many suicide cases have resulted from parents not spending time with their children.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

In conclusion, it is understandable why parents do not spend enough time with their children. However, parents need to work on this more because this negligence affects children more negatively and seriously than it does parents.

It is increasingly more popular for parents to spend more time at work; thus, less time is spent on nurturing their children. This essay will explore some possible factors behind this trend and explain why children suffer more from the lack of parenting.

Firstly, two of the primary reasons why parents nowadays hardly spend time with their children are their tight schedule and technology overdependence. With regard to the former, considering that the cost of living in major cities is now soaring, it is no wonder that both parents have to spend the majority of their time at work to be able to afford a decent standard of living for their children. As for the latter, most parents prefer staring at their devices in their downtime to having a real conversation with their children. As a result, this screen addiction can widen the generation gap in families, thus causing a communication barrier in the family.

When parents tend to spend less time with their offspring, it is their children who suffer the most. Without the presence of parents during their important moments, such as birthdays or special events at school, children are more likely to feel lonely, neglected, and depressed. To make matters worse, this poor parent-child relation could lead to a higher probability of delinquency. Conversely, if parents make efforts to spend more quality time with their children and provide guidance, encouragement, and appropriate discipline, this would strengthen the family bond, thus leading to a healthier, happier family.

In conclusion, hectic schedule and technology addiction are two of the main reasons why parents invest less time in their children, and this would adversely affect the lives of young children.
