

HERE AND THERE

The City that Never Sleeps

By Shiri Avraham

I can't believe I'm in the USA! I am staying in New York City with my cousin Jenny. It is my first day here and I have already seen so much.

My plane landed at 6:00 this morning. Jenny and I went right from the airport to the Empire State Building. It was crowded, but I took some really cool pictures of the amazing view from the top of the building.

After that, we took the subway downtown and got off at the Museum of Ice Cream. I really liked this museum, especially because we got lots of ice cream! I have to stop writing now. Jenny wants to take me to a show on Broadway. I still need to adjust to the change in hours. (Here, it's 7 in the evening, and back home in Israel, it's already 2 in the morning!) But I don't have time to take it easy. I'm beginning to realize why they call New York "the city that never sleeps".

COMMENTS:
If you have time, visit Ellis Island. It's a great place to learn about American history and the people who came to live there. Bob Collins

2 A Delicious Festival

I am on vacation with my parents in Italy. We are in a small town called Perugia, which is famous for its chocolate festival. Earache chocolate. When I look outside the window, I can see hundreds of tourists. They are probably here for the same reason we are: to eat chocolate!

There are many things to do at this festival and in the city. For example, you can walk around the market and buy different kinds of chocolates. Tourists can join a cooking class and learn how to make a variety of traditional Italian foods, like pasta and pizza.

It was fun, but if you ask me, the best part of the 10-day festival is the chocolate sculpture competition. In this competition, artists create beautiful sculptures from huge blocks of chocolate. And to make things even more fun, you can eat the small pieces of chocolate that fly off the blocks while the artists are creating their sculptures.

Another great place to visit is the famous Perugia Chocolate Factory and Museum. We were there this morning on a tour. We learned about the history of the company and how it developed over time. Then our guide took us around the factory. It was exciting to see how they make the famous Perugia chocolates and, of course, to enjoy their delicious taste.

COMMENTS:
I was at the festival a few years ago. I remember that my parents bought a ChocoCard for about 6 euros. It saved us a lot of money on restaurants, and we even got a discount for our hotel! Lisa Welch

FIELDS OF FLOWERS

By Elena Hassan

This year, my family and I went to the Darom Adom Festival on Wednesday because it's less crowded during the week. This festival takes place each year during the months of January and February and lasts for four weeks. At this time of the year, the hills of the northern Negev are covered with a beautiful carpet of bright red flowers. It is amazing!

We were happy to see that there is a large variety of fun activities at the festival, like bike marathons, hot-air balloons, rides, guided tours and concerts by Israeli artists. We went fruit picking! We each got a small box and picked delicious strawberries. And of course, there is also fruit for sale! If you want to take some home, but make sure to check the weather before you go. Because it's in February, there's always a chance of rain.

COMMENTS:
I'm glad you had a nice time at the festival. Unfortunately, our visit was a little unpleasant. Our youngest daughter didn't know it's illegal to pick the flowers. She picked a bright red flower and one of the workers got very upset with us. Mark Brown
