Match the children of different birth orders with the personality traits and the reasons why they have those traits.

responsible	creative	dependent	adaptable
charming	self-critical	dependable	leader
social	independent	break rules	Peacemaker

Birth-order	Personality traits	Reasons
First-born children		Parents often ask the eldest child to help take care of younger siblings. This makes them responsible from a young age.
	Leader
		Parents and siblings often count on the eldest child, which makes them feel they must be dependable.
	self-critical
Middle children	adaptable
		They are stuck between the older and younger siblings. They try to keep peace in the family.
	social
		They may feel less noticed because parents give more attention to the eldest and youngest. This makes them want to find their own way.
Youngest children	Charming
		As the "baby," they often tries to be different and get attention from their older siblings.
	break rules dependent

LIVEWORKSHEETS

They often act like a leader for younger siblings. This helps them build leadership skills.

Their parents are not as strict with them as with older siblings.

Parents expect more from them, which can make them feel pressure to succeed and do everything right.

they may feel less noticed at home, so they build strong friendships outside the family.

They often use charm to get attention or stay out of trouble.

They learn to adapt because they are between the older sibling's success and the younger sibling's needs.

They are often spoiled by parents and siblings, so they may depend on others more.

LIVEWORKSHEETS