Studying Monkeys

Do you ever wonder what animals are thinking? Why they behave the way they do? What they are trying to say to one another? You may want to consider ethology as a career. Ethologists study animal behavior.

When Dorothy Fragaszy was young, her passion was exploring nature. She especially liked to study animals. In college, Dorothy learned that she could make a career out of her interest. Now she's an ethologist.

Dorothy's work involves watching wild capuchin monkeys in Brazil. She notes what they eat, where they go, how they use tools, and how they interact. Her job can be dangerous, and she takes risks. Sometimes she climbs cliffs to follow the monkeys. She thinks the best part of her job is watching the monkeys play.

Dorothy wants people to love nature and protect it. Her work helps us understand our place in the world.
