Noah Kahan is a singer from a small town in Vermont, USA. He became famous when his songs went viral on TikTok, especially his song "Stick Season." Before he became famous, Noah made his first album called Busyhead. However, this album didn't become very popular. During the COVID-19 pandemic, Noah moved back to Vermont. This time, he created a new style of music. His new songs were more personal and connected with many people who shared his feelings.

In 2023, Noah was nominated for a Grammy Award for Best New Artist. This was a big moment in his career. His music mixes folk, pop, and rock. Fans love his songs because they talk about real-life feelings, like living in a small town and dealing with emotions.

Noah has also worked with other famous artists like Kacey Musgraves and Hozier. In 2023, he performed on stage with Hozier in Nashville, and fans were very excited. Noah's music has become very popular, and he now has fans all over the world.

Noah cares a lot about the environment. He uses his platform to talk about important issues like climate change and protecting nature. His music is not just about love and personal stories—it also inspires people to think about the world around them.

Noah Kahan's success shows how social media, especially TikTok, can help new artists become famous. His story is an example of how the internet can bring people together and help music spread quickly around the world.
