Questions 11-15

Read the text and questions below.

For each question, mark the correct letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet.

Life on other planets

Fourteen-year-old Nick Miller talks about his science project

To support some kind of life, a planet needs liquid water between 0°C to 100°C. Liquid water can be on or under the surface. Besides liquid water, living things also need nutrients including carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen. Another important thing is the atmosphere. If a planet has a thick atmosphere, it can stop space rocks from hitting the planet. A thick atmosphere generally means a warmer surface temperature. If a planet has a thin atmosphere, things from space can hit the surface, which is what happened to our moon. I think there might be life on Mars. Mars is quite cold and has a thin atmosphere, but it has enough nutrients, and it may have a little liquid water. What do you think?

11. What is the main idea of Nick's project?

- A. The aliens on other planet would be taller than people.
- B. Conditions for life on other planets.
- C. People can live on other planets.
- D. Travel to other planets.

12. What does Nick say about liquid water?

- A. It must higher than 100°C to have life.
- B. A planet only needs liquid water to have life.
- C. It can be on or under the planet's surface.
- D. Liquid water must be under the surface of a planet.

13. What does Nick say about nutrients?

A. Living things on other planets do not need nutrients.
B. People need nutrients to survive.
C. Carbon and oxygen are the two most important nutrients.
D. Living things need four main kinds of nutrients.

14. What does Nick think about the atmosphere of a planet?

A. A planet needs a thick atmosphere to have a warmer temperature.
B. A thick atmosphere cannot support life.
C. A planet with a thin atmosphere might not have space rocks.
D. A thick or thin atmosphere is not important for life.

15. What might Nick say about life on other planets?

A. It's impossible for there to be life on other planets.
B. There is a planet that he believes may have life.
C. People will be able to live on the Moon.
D. Earth is the only planet that can support life.
