If you travel around the world, you will learn that every country has different customs. It is what makes travelling so interesting! If you visit Thailand in April, you will see the Songkran celebrations – and you might get very wet! Songkran is the Thai New Year, and it is traditional to throw buckets of water at passers-by on the street! If you did that in London, you might get arrested!

Different countries have different laws, so you have to be careful. Of course, stealing and murder are illegal everywhere, but some laws are surprising. In England, if you buy a stamp with the Queen's head on it, you must make sure you stick it on your letter the right way up. It is illegal to stick the stamp on a letter upside-down. It shows that you do not respect the Queen.

Many laws in England were made centuries ago. As time passes, they are not important any more, but they have not been changed. For example, did you know that it is illegal to wear a top hat in the city of London? And in the seventeenth century Oliver Cromwell banned eating mince pies on Christmas Day. Mince pies are a traditional Christmas treat, so millions of people in the UK break that law every Christmas. There are hundreds of laws like this, which seem stupid to us now. Since 1965 over 2,000 old laws have been changed, but there are thousands more – so be careful!

13. Songkran is an annual festival in Thailand. _____
14. You mustn't use stamps with the Queen's head on them. _____
15. Some laws are old-fashioned and out-of-date. _____
16. All the silly laws have been changed. _____
