

The chart below illustrates data on Europeans from various age groups who attended a gym once a month or more between 1990 and 2010.

European people of different age groups who went to a gym once a month or more, 1990-2010

contrast	striking	respectively	pace	comparison dominant	surge	regards	insights	two-fold

The line graph provides into the proportion of European people in 4 age groups went/ going to a gym at least once a month over a 20-year period from 1990 to 2010.

From an overall/ overview perspective, what/ it stands out from the graph is that all age groups witnessed a rise/ rises at different paces over the period in/ on question.

Another feature is the figure for the 25-34 age group was the largest/ largest inwith others/ the others in/ at the beginning while the 18-24 age group held theposition in/ at the end of the time frame.

Looking at the graph for more details, asthe group of people aged/ aging 25-34, there/ it was a constant....., reaching roughly 50% in 2010. Similar/ Similarly, the figure for the 18-24 age group also saw a soar although/ in spite of it went up at a sharper....., reaching a peak at/ of 60% in 2010 despite/ however a sudden drop/ dropped to roughly 50% in 2008.

In, with respect/ regarding to the 35-44 and 45 and over, their figures experienced fractional/ fractionally rises to near/ nearly 20% and just over 10%over the first 16 years, following/ followed by increases to most/ almost 40 and just above 20% over the last 4 years.