Adventures in the air

The first ever balloon flight carrying passengers was made by the Montgolfier brothers in 1783. They used hot air to float the balloon (16) _____. Nowadays, people still fly in hot-air balloons, but there is also a less well-known sport called ‘cluster ballooning’; instead of one big balloon, (17) _____.

Cluster ballooning was invented by a lorry driver called Larry Walters. Larry had wanted to fly using balloons for a long time. In fact, he was just a boy when he first started thinking about it. It took almost 20 years, however, for his dream to finally come true. One day, Larry decided to do an experiment: he wanted to try flying a few metres (18) _____. So he bought 45 balloons, filled them with a gas called helium, and tied them to a chair. He then cut the rope that was holding the chair to the ground. However, there was an unexpected problem. The chair, with Larry sitting in it, floated several kilometres into the sky rather than just a few metres!

The wind was blowing strongly and Larry began to float out towards the sea. Things were getting dangerous. Then, to make matters even worse, the wind changed, and the balloons started to blow towards the local airport. Larry felt very worried. Luckily, (19) _____. The story of Larry’s flight was all over the news and this is how the adventure sport of cluster ballooning was born.

One experienced cluster balloonist, Leo Burns, flew his cluster balloons over the largest range of mountains in Europe – the Alps. This wasn’t his first flight, though. Leo had got his pilot’s licence several years before, so was already used to flying. But these days, he prefers to use balloons. According to Leo, there is no better way to fly. (20) _____ he says. ‘The balloons are usually completely silent. The old-fashioned hot-air balloons made a horrible noise. They weren’t as safe as modern cluster balloons either.’

- A. above his garden.
- B. over 1,000 metres up into the sky
- C. He doesn’t like that solution.
- D. he landed safely after a couple of hours
- E. There is a big one balloon up in the sky.
- F. hundreds of small balloons are used.
- G. ‘Cluster ballooning’s amazing,’
