Green Mountain

Have you ever climbed Green Mountain? I've climbed it several times, but the best time was with the Garcias in 2009. Mr. Garcia was really inactive, and so were his three sons. But they only took challenging vacations. They were bored by art museums and thought beach resorts were disappointing. They loved bungee jumping in New Zealand, scuba diving at the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, or freestyle skiing in Colorado.

We climbed Green Mountain in one day, and we didn't stop once. First, we hiked through the woods and sang old songs. Mr. Garcia told us, "We should be careful of tripping over small rocks or tree branches." Then, we swam across a small river in our clothes. Next, we climbed big rocks without any ropes. This was the most tiring part of the trip. Finally, when we got to the top of the mountain, we ate cold pizza and candy. When we returned to the campsite hours later, Mrs. Garcia was waiting for us. She had lots of snacks and water for us...

My Childhood: Things I Used to Do

When I was a child, I used to spend most of my time outdoors. I used to ride my bike around the neighborhood every afternoon, feeling the wind on my face and the sun on my back. We used to have a big park near our house, and I often went there to play with my friends. We used to climb trees, play soccer, and have picnics in the grass.

I also used to visit my grandparents every weekend. My grandma used to bake the most delicious cookies, and my grandpa used to tell me stories about when he was young. They always made me feel so special.

At home, I used to spend hours reading books. My mom used to read stories to me before bed, and I loved those moments. I also used to watch my favorite cartoons on Saturday mornings, eating a big bowl of cereal.

Looking back, I realize how different life was back then. I didn't have a phone or a computer, so I used to entertain myself with simple things like drawing, building forts, or exploring the neighborhood. Those were the days I will always remember.
