

Growing up, my brother and I were completely different. He was always very (0) considerate, thinking about other people's feelings, while I was quite (1) _____ and often forgot to check how others felt.

At school, I was quite (2) _____ about my future, always making sure I finished my assignments on time, but my brother was very (3) _____ and never worried about his responsibilities.

One thing that really set us apart was how we handled tasks. I was extremely (4) _____, always planning everything in advance, whereas he was completely (5) _____ and always left things to the last minute. (ORGANISED / DISORGANISED)

When it came to new experiences, I was naturally (6) _____, eager to try new things, but my brother was very (7) _____ and rarely showed any excitement.

Another key difference was our manners. I was always (8) _____, making sure to greet people properly, while he could sometimes be quite (9) _____ without even realizing it.

Now that we are older, I can see that despite his flaws, he has become much more (10) _____ than he used to be. He now thinks before acting and considers the consequences of his decisions.
