Read the following passage about Gender Equality Around the World and Its Role in International Cooperation and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 23 to 30.

Gender equality means that everyone, regardless of gender, has equal rights, opportunities, and access to resources. Despite progress in many parts of the world, gender inequality remains a significant issue. In some countries, women still struggle for basic rights like education, healthcare, and equal pay. According to the World Economic Forum, the gender gap in the workplace has narrowed, but it will take over 250 years to close it entirely at the current pace.

Some countries, however, have made significant strides toward gender equality. In Iceland, for example, women have held leadership positions for years, and the country consistently ranks at the top of global gender equality indexes. Iceland has introduced policies such as paid parental leave and free childcare to support working parents, which helps both men and women balance family and work life.

Yet, there are places where cultural norms still enforce traditional gender roles. In many rural areas, girls are expected to help with household chores and are often not given the opportunity to pursue education. These gender-based restrictions limit their future prospects and keep them trapped in a cycle of poverty.

Advances in technology are also helping to address gender inequality. Online platforms are providing women with new opportunities to learn, communicate, and even start businesses. Initiatives like digital literacy programs and support networks for women entrepreneurs are helping close the gender gap in tech and business sectors.

Read the following passage about Vietnam Joining International Organizations and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] In recent decades, Vietnam has increasingly integrated into the global community by joining various international organizations. This shift reflects the country's commitment to participating in global governance, promoting economic development, and enhancing diplomatic relations. By joining organizations like the United Nations, ASEAN, and the World Trade Organization, Vietnam has gained access to wider international markets and strengthened its global influence.

[II] One of the main benefits of joining international organizations is economic growth. For instance, membership in the World Trade Organization has provided Vietnam with opportunities to expand exports, attract foreign investment, and improve its manufacturing and agricultural sectors. Additionally, Vietnam's participation in ASEAN has helped facilitate regional cooperation, leading to economic stability and collective growth among Southeast Asian nations.

[III] However, there are challenges associated with this global integration. Vietnam must meet the requirements set by international bodies, such as adhering to global standards in trade, human rights, and environmental protection. These obligations can sometimes limit the country's autonomy in decision-making, especially when national interests conflict with international expectations.

[IV] Despite these challenges, the benefits outweigh the costs. By becoming part of international organizations, Vietnam has improved its diplomatic relations, gained access to international aid, and attracted more tourists and investors. The country's participation in global governance has positioned it as a key player in regional and global affairs, contributing to its overall development.
