VI. Read the passage and choose the correct answer.

The Mekong River, which is over 4,000 kilometres long, is the world's twelfth longest river and the Southeast Asia's longest transboundary river. The Mekong River started round 17 million years ago due to increased erosion from monsoon precipitation. Its original name is Mae Nam Khong. In Lao language, Mae Nam (Mother of Waters) means large rivers, and Khong is a proper name.

From Tibetan Plateau the Mekong River runs through China, Myanmar, Laos, Thailand, Cambodia and Viet Nam. It not only is rich in plant and fish diversity but also provides very important transport links in Laos, Thailand, Cambodia and Viet Nam. The Mekong River plays an important role in the life of the people in Southeast Asia, providing a means for people to access natural resources, and social facilities such as schools or health services. In addition, passenger transport along the river also makes a nice contribution to tourism development.

[I] The Mekong River is also a major trade route in Southeast Asia. [II] However, though the river brings about great income and different job opportunities, the navigation potential of this river is not fully exploited. [III] The geographical features greatly vary along its length. For instance, the upper part of this river in Laos contains a number of physical obstacles and turbulent sections and only experienced skippers and boats that are small in size can safely navigate this part of the river. [IV] Improvements are expected to make the river passable for much larger cargo boats, which will increase potential for both regional and international exchange of goods.

Nowadays, the Mekong River confronts various challenges, including dam construction altering its flow and ecosystem, leading to habitat loss and declining fish stocks. Pollution from agricultural runoff, industrial waste, and urban development threatens water quality and biodiversity. Climate change intensifies these issues, contributing to extreme weather events, sea level rise, and strange rainfall patterns. These challenges put the livelihoods of millions at risk. Collaborative efforts among countries are essential to address these issues and ensure the sustainable management of the Mekong River.

27. Which of these statements is TRUE about the Mekong River?
- A. It is nearly 4,000 kilometers long.
  - B. It runs through 7 countries in Asia.

VII. Choose the correct answer A, B, C or D:

Records show that only two out of all Japanese pagodas have collapsed during the past 1400 years. The disastrous Hanshin earthquake in 1995 killed 6,400 people, destroyed elevated highways, flattened office blocks and devastated the port area of Kobe. (36) _____. How could this happen?

Japanese scholars have been confused for ages about why these tall, slender buildings are so stable. It was only thirty years ago (37) _____ to erect office blocks of steel and reinforced concrete that had more than a dozen floors. With its special shock absorbers to dampen the effect of sudden sideways movements from an earthquake, the thirty-six-storey Kasumigaseki building in central Tokyo - Japan's first skyscraper - was considered a masterpiece of modern engineering when it was built in 1968.

Yet years ago, using only pegs and wedges to keep his wooden structure upright, (38) _____ in sending his majestic Toji pagoda soaring fifty-five metres into the sky - nearly half as high as the Kasumigaseki skyscraper. Clearly, Japanese carpenters back then knew a few tricks about allowing a building to sway and settle itself rather than fight nature's forces.

To discover (39) _____, we need to look at the structure within Japanese pagodas. They often have a massive trunk-like central pillar at the centre, known as "shinbashira", which is suspended loosely down through the middle of the building. Furthermore, each floors of a Japanese pagodas do not connect with each other in any way. In fact, the floors are stacked one on top of another like a pile of hats. During an earthquake, each floor will vibrate and move in different directions. The shinbashira, running up through a hole in the centre of the building, (40) _____. As the different floors banged into it, energy is transmitted away along the column, prevent the structure from collapsing.
