An unusual job offer

Whycocomagh is a small village on the beautiful island of Cape Breton in Canada, but the local supermarket has a problem. It needs three new shop assistants and people don't want to come to live in Whycocomagh because it's very quiet and far from any big cities.

So the owners of the Farmer's Daughter store put an unusual job advert on Facebook. It says, 'We can't give you big money, but we can give you an awesome life' ... and they offer over 8 km² of free land!

Thousands of people from around the world are interested and want to work in the village, so now the supermarket has some new shop assistants. But what's the village really like? We talk to Kelly Jenkins, a teacher at the village school.

Tell us about Whycocomagh, Kelly.

It's small, but it's beautiful. There's a school, a post office and the local supermarket, of course! There are also some hotels and restaurants for tourists.

Is there a shopping centre or a cinema?

No, there isn't! There aren't any big shops and there isn't a cinema or a nightclub. But there are some wonderful people here. Everyone is very friendly.

Are there any problems?

Yes, there are ... but life's boring without any problems!
