1 Read the magazine problem page. Then read the expert's reply. Which problem does it refer to? Tick (✓).

A My parents are very strict and I'm not allowed to do the things that my friends do. For example, I'm not allowed to stay out after nine at the weekend or use Facebook. The kids in my class laugh at me and I feel depressed. Why can't my parents understand how unhappy I am?

Ben, 13

B I borrow things from my friend and she borrows clothes, books and other things from me all the time. The problem is, when my friend gives things back to me, they are often dirty or damaged. She never says sorry. If I talk to her about this, she'll get angry. What should I do?

Sharon, 13

C My friends are from rich families and they have a lot of expensive gadgets. They also get a lot of pocket money. I'm not jealous of their things, but I can't afford to go to expensive cafés and join them. I feel embarrassed. I don't know what to do.

Tim, 15

Hi,

1 Thank you for your letter. Lots of people have this problem. But first, let me ask you some questions. When you borrow things from your friend, do you remember to give them back to her? Do you give them back in a good condition? Remember: some people look after their own things, but they are not very careful about other people's things.

You shouldn't avoid talking to your friend about your problem. Try to explain that you look after your things. You could ask her to be careful with them and keep them clean. Finally, don't allow your friend to borrow very valuable things – it's a good idea to say 'no' sometimes! A good friend should understand.

2 Good luck!
