Modern living can be difficult. Can technology make it easier? Most of us have very [1]busy/sociable lifestyles. There's not much time to do the things we want to do. In some ways we are more [2]sociable/energetic than previous generations. With technology, we're always available to friends and workmates. This can also be [3]stressful/active because we are always connected on our phones and we can never take a break. However, I think we can be more [4]healthy/sensible about how much time we spend on our phones. Is checking our messages every five minutes necessary or [5]healthy/energetic? I believe that if we control our use of technology more, we can benefit from it. What's more, there are so many apps now that can help you improve your general fitness. For example, there are apps which count your steps and this can motivate you to be more [6]energetic/fun. It's a very [7]simple/quiet way of doing more exercise every day. If we use technology well, it can improve our quality of life.
