Childhood is a special time in life when we grow, learn, and explore. Many people look back on their childhood with happy memories of the adults who inspired them. These could be parents, grandparents, teachers, or even neighbors. They encouraged children to stay curious, study hard, and dream big. For some, these adults helped shape a love for learning that lasts a lifetime. Unfortunately, not all children have a happy childhood. Many children around the world live in poverty without clean water, enough food, or proper healthcare. Some children live in dangerous places or are even forced to fight in wars. Over 120 million children do not attend school, and many who do cannot read, write, or do basic math. Children depend on adults for care and support, but sadly, not all adults fulfill this responsibility.

To protect children, Universal Children's Day is celebrated on November 20 every year. This day reminds us of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, a global agreement that ensures all children have rights. These include the right to safety, education, healthcare, play, and rest. The agreement asks adults to protect children and help them grow into confident and capable people. As adults, we can inspire the next generation by teaching children about their rights and supporting their love for learning. Every small action can make a big difference in creating a better world for children. (233 words)
