Many students face difficulties in school, but disadvantaged students have even bigger problems. A study found that two-thirds of academy chains in the UK do not help low-income students succeed. Some schools improve education, but many still struggle to provide enough support.

One big problem is lack of support at home. Many students take care of siblings or work over 20 hours a week. This leaves little time for studying. Some students also have no quiet place to study because they share a room or sleep on the sofa. Without a proper study space, they often lose their homework or cannot concentrate.

Another issue is low career ambition. Research shows that almost half of students from poor families do not know anyone with a job they want. This makes them less confident and less motivated to work hard. Only one in eight of these students becomes a high earner in the future.

Mentors and role models can help. Studies show that 84% of students feel more confident after meeting successful former students, and 82% start working harder. Schools can also support students by offering free meals, counseling, and study programs. With the right help, disadvantaged students can improve their education and have a better future.

31. What is the main idea of the text?
