Last year Ian went to Scotland for a week. He really wanted to go to London, but his parents didn't have any friends there, so he stayed with his cousins in Edinburgh. His cousins were really nice. They went on two sightseeing tours of Edinburgh with him, and they visited lots of interesting places.

Ian thought the castle was best. He saw the Crown Jewels of Scotland there, and at midday he heard the big gun fire. But he also liked the parks, the shops, and the old railway bridge over the Firth of Forth.

He didn't want to go to any museums, but his cousins took him to a small museum of police history in the High Street. It had interesting facts about thieves and murderers. Ian thought it was great. He also had time to visit the countryside and the seaside.

At the end of the week, Ian was tired, but happy. He told his cousins 'I've changed my mind about Scotland. It's more fun than London!'
