

School in India Uses Cardboard Boxes to Prevent Cheating

A school in India is facing backlash over an anti-cheating experiment involving boxes. Students at Bhagat Pre-University College were invited to bring in their own boxes to wear on their heads while taking an exam. The school said that parents were informed and students were not to participate in the anti-cheating trial. When photos of the test takers were shared over social media, the school agreed to put an end to the experiment. is a major problem in many schools in India where students are often pressured to receive top marks in order to gain entrance to .

Other efforts to prevent cheating in India have included installing cameras, hiring police officers to monitor examination rooms, and requiring the of socks and shoes.
