

Massive Starfish Airport Opens in Beijing

A huge new airport officially opened to the public in Beijing this week. Beijing Daxing International, the second major airport, was designed in the shape of a starfish. It was designed this way to save time for travellers who need to get from one area of the airport to another. The multimillion dollar airport has many high-tech features, including recognition for security. By 2020, China will likely pass the US as the world's largest air travel . The grand opening of the airport coincides with the 70th anniversary of the People's Republic of China on 1.
