

Boy: Mom, there's going to be a race next _____. I'd like to run in it with all my friends.

Woman: Great. When will it start?

Boy: I have the time here on this paper. It says midday.

Woman: OK, I can take you in the car.

Boy: Thanks, Mom. I want to be there early!

Can you see the answer? Now you listen and write.

Woman: Where will the race start, David?

Boy: We'll have to meet _____ the school first but that's not where we'll start.

Woman: Oh.

Boy: No, we're going to start from the _____.

Woman: I see. What are you going to wear?

Boy: What about my new T-shirt? The one with the _____.

Woman: That's a good idea.

Boy: My teacher says that it's important to eat the right _____ before the race.

Woman: A nice _____ and fries?

Boy: No, Mom. You have to eat pasta. That's the best food.

Woman: OK. I can cook some for you.

Boy: Thanks. The race is going to be a long one. We'll have to go through the _____.

Woman: And when will you know it's the end of the race?

Boy: We'll see a _____. Someone will wave it at the finishing line.

Woman: OK, I'll be there with Dad to watch you. What will happen after the race?

Boy: I'm going to meet my friends in the _____.

Woman: What are you going to do there?

Boy: We'll have a _____.
