David and Ben had a long journey, over ten kilometres on foot every day, (17)_____. In the end, though, this particular distance might be the basis for something unexpected. David looks set to become another of Kenya's famous long-distance runners, coming second in the 10,000 metres at the recent Paris games, (18)_____.

Now, another group of students from the same school has to make the same daily journey.
They have, however, been encouraged by the success of David and Ben, (19)_____. For at least one of them, achieving sporting success is only part deal with hazards most children never experience. Part of the journey takes him through a forest, (21)_____. The majority of the way is along muddy roads, with the further danger of flooded rivers. Occasionally the bridges he needs to cross are under water or even swept away.

On such days, he stays at home. On a bad day, this might mean going several kilometres before he even realises he can't go any further. He then has to go all the way back. He doesn't give up, though. He is driven on by his desire to get a good education and has ambitions to become a doctor one day. According to Moses, (22)_____.
