

Women in Social Work in the United Kingdom

In the United Kingdom, women make up the majority of the social work workforce. From child protection to mental health, community development, and support for vulnerable adults, female social workers are at the forefront of essential public

Historically, social work has been seen as “caring profession”, often attracting women due to traditional gender roles. Today, however, many women choose this path not only out of compassion but also because they believe in social justice, equality, and systemic change.

Despite their crucial role, female social workers often face heavy caseloads, emotional stress, and the challenge of maintaining a work-life balance. Many work in difficult environments such as deprived neighbourhoods, hospitals, care homes, and refugee centres.

In recent years, there has been growing recognition of the need to support the wellbeing of social workers, particularly women, who may juggle professional demands with family responsibilities.
