True/False

Indicate whether the statement is true or false.

Read the article. Then answer T for True or F for False.

Ben Franklin, Inventor

In today's world, inventors often work with tiny electronics and highly specialized computer technology. Inventors from the past, however, built much simpler things, like devices that helped stop house fires, or eyeglasses that allowed people to see better. Benjamin Franklin was an inventor from the 1700s whose useful inventions remained popular many years after he created them.

One of his inventions was the Franklin stove. In the 1700s, most people used fireplaces to heat their houses. This method wasted a lot of energy because much of the fire's heat went up the chimney and not into the house. Fireplaces were also dangerous as they sometimes caused house fires. Around 1740, Franklin designed a stove that helped redirect the heat from the fire into the house. These Franklin stoves were much more efficient than fireplaces, and they were a lot safer, too.

Another of Franklin's home improvements was the lightning rod. Back then, lightning that hit people's homes often caused fires. Franklin, who understood electricity better than most other people, put an iron rod on the roof of his house. The rod was connected to a wire that went down into the ground. Lightning would hit the tall iron rod instead of the roof of the house, and electricity would travel through the wire before reaching the ground - not through the house, where it could start a fire.

Franklin was also responsible for inventing bifocal lenses. Five hundred years earlier, Allesandro Della Spina invented eyeglasses to help people see things at a distance. Then, in the 1300s, another Italian inventor developed eyeglasses to help people see things up close. Franklin found a way to combine the lenses of both types of eyeglasses for people who needed help in both areas. He named his new lenses bifocal lenses. Today, millions of people around the world still rely on bifocal lenses to help them see better.

- _____ 1. This reading explains some of Benjamin Franklin's important inventions.
- _____ 2. In the first paragraph, the word specialized means designed to do many different things.
- _____ 3. The sentence below would fit best at the end of the third paragraph:
- "Today, Franklin's invention can be seen on the top of tall buildings everywhere."*
- _____ 4. The Franklin stove was safer, but it didn't heat up homes as well as a regular fireplace.

- _____ 5. Franklin's bifocal lenses meant that some people no longer had to have two pairs of eyeglasses.

A Hidden City

In 1911, Hiram Bingham went looking for the lost Incan city of Vilcabamba - a mountain city used by those fighting against the Spanish in the 16th century. What he found instead was Machu Picchu, an ancient Incan site high up in the Andes Mountains, about 80 kilometers from Cuzco, Peru. Hiram and other researchers discovered many amazing things there, including ancient artifacts, a temple, a gate, a building for food, and several homes.

They also found the bodies of some of the people who lived there. They studied the bodies to find out more about the lives of the people there, and through their research, they learned that during the 15th and 16th centuries, as many as 1,000 people lived within the walls of Machu Picchu. Most of them, researchers believed, were probably kings or rich people who went to Machu Picchu to get away from the busy Incan capital of Cuzco.

According to research, the city of Machu Picchu was very active for about 100 years. But something happened in the middle of the 16th century that caused people to leave the city. The city was forgotten, and eventually, it became the ruins we see today with grass growing over the buildings and its walls falling apart. No one knows exactly why the people of Machu Picchu left, but Bingham's discovery 400 years later allowed the world to see a little of what Incan life was like.
