Family Changes

My family used to be very different from what it is today. When I was young, we used to live in a small apartment with just my parents and my twin brother. My mother used to work part-time as a teacher, and my father used to be quite strict with us. We didn't use to have much money, but we were very close.

Everything changed when I turned fifteen. My parents got divorced, and my mother remarried a man called David who had two children from his previous marriage - my new step-siblings. Suddenly, our small family became much bigger! My step-father is much more relaxed than my biological father used to be. He's very patient and sociable, while my real father was more serious and organized.

My step-sister Emma is very creative and enthusiastic about art, which I find inspiring. My step-brother Mark can be quite rebellious sometimes, but he's also very caring towards his younger sister. The biggest change is that we now have a foster child, Lucy, staying with us temporarily. She's very brave considering what she's been through, and she's becoming like a real sister to us.

I used to think that only traditional families could be happy, but now I realize that love and support matter more than biology. Our "new" family might be complicated, but we're all learning to live together harmoniously.
