The Village Festival

Every year, people in my village look forward to the third day of Tet, one of our most important festivals. In the morning, we gather by the riverside to watch exciting competitions. First comes a special boat race. Some team members cook rice on the boat while others row as fast as possible. The team with well-cooked rice and the fastest speed wins. After that, the referee releases a duck into the river, and contestants jump in to catch it. The atmosphere is full of laughter, drumbeats, and cheers from the crowd.

At noon, there is a village party at the communal house for the elders. Families also hold home parties where we cook sticky rice, steamed chicken, and other traditional dishes. Sometimes, we prepare food that children love, such as bun cha or even pizza.

The festival is a meaningful time for everyone. It helps us keep our traditions, strengthen family bonds, and connect joyfully with neighbors and friends.

Online learning is becoming more and more common, but it has several disadvantages. Firstly, it is difficult for students to concentrate because they do not have direct contact with their teachers and friends. Secondly, spending many hours looking at the screen can harm students' eyes and make them feel tired quickly. Thirdly, studying online requires expensive equipment such as a computer and a stable Internet connection, which not all families can afford. For these reasons, I prefer going to school and having face-to-face lessons every day.
