Once upon a time there lived a chief. He was very lucky because he had (1 E) called Hans. One day the chief didn't see his cow grazing in the field and so he sent Hans to look for the missing animal. Hans stayed away (2 —).

The chief got upset because he thought Hans was lazy and didn't want to look for the cow. Hours passed but the servant and the cow were still missing. So, (3 —) set out himself to look for them. At last he spotted the boy running up and down (4 —).

"Now, dear Hans, have you found the cow?" the chief asked.

"No, chief," said Hans. "And I haven't even looked for it."

"Then what are you looking for?" asked the chief. He was about to tell him off.

"I'm looking for (5 —)," answered the boy.

The chief was very surprised and he looked around. "So, where are your blackbirds then?" he asked.

"I see one of them, I hear the other, and I am running after the third bird," answered the wise boy.

Follow the example of Hans – a clever boy who listens to his chief but always does what he thinks is (6 —) to do.
