I will never forget that terrible day when I was bullied by some of my classmates. I had borrowed a book from Mai, one of my peers. After finishing it, another girl in our group, Linh, asked if she could borrow it too. Without thinking much, I gave the book to her, believing she would return it quickly. Linh read it and then passed it back to Mai instead of me. Mai pretended that I had never given it to Linh and kept asking me to return the book.

I felt helpless and almost burst into tears because I didn't know how to explain the situation. Finally, I decided to tell our form teacher. After listening to my story, she asked

Mai calmly: “Do you really want another copy of the same book?” Then she turned to Linh and said: “Linh, you should return the book to Hoa, because she was the one who lent it to you.”

Mai was silent for a while and then reluctantly took the book out of her backpack. She gave it back to Linh, who quickly returned it to me with an apology. I could finally hand it back to Mai. She looked ashamed of her trick, and I learnt a lesson: always return what I borrow to the original lender only.

I went to Singapore on my own for a ten-day summer course, and it turned out to be one of the most memorable experiences of my life. There were about fifteen students from China, Malaysia, Cambodia, India, and Iran taking part in the course. From the very beginning, we were all impressed by the cleanliness, safety, and discipline of the country.

On the second day, we had a special team-building activity. We were divided into groups of five with students from different countries and given a map to search for a hidden location. It was not easy—we had to walk for hours, take buses and the metro, and even got lost a few times. However, the excitement of working together helped us finally arrive at the destination, and the memory still makes me smile.

In the following days, we attended English lessons, worked on projects, and shared our own traditions and customs. We also visited famous places like the Botanic Gardens, Chinatown, and the Discovery Centre. Each trip gave us a chance to learn and connect with one another.

After the course, I felt proud of myself for being able to travel without my parents and for truly leaving my comfort zone.

(Adapted from Global workbook 9)

WRITING EXAMPLE – Pleasant Experience

I still remember the most pleasant experience I have had at school. It was when our class organised a charity event to help poor children. We sold handmade cards, old books, and some toys to raise money. At first, we were a bit nervous because we didn't know if people would buy them. However, many teachers and students supported us, and we collected a good amount of money. After that, we visited a small village school and gave the children new notebooks, pens, and snacks. Their smiles made me feel so happy and proud. It was one of the most meaningful days of my school life, and I learnt that sharing and kindness can bring joy to everyone.
