Life in the past was quite different compared to modern times. The breadwinner of the family, usually the father, would work long hours to provide for his family. Mothers typically stayed at home as housewives, managing household chores and looking after the children. Families often lived in close-knit communities with extended relatives, creating strong social connections. Children played outside, engaging in traditional games rather than using modern gadgets.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Marriage was considered a lifelong commitment, and divorce was uncommon because of societal norms and values. People relied on each other, which fostered a sense of community and mutual support. Travel was often done by simple means such as bicycles, walking, or tuk-tuks for short distances. Life was slower, and people took the time to enjoy simple pleasures.

However, despite the strong family bonds and sense of community, there were challenges. Work was physically demanding, and many families struggled to make ends meet. Education wasn't as easy to get as it is now, and lots of kids had to work to help their families. Despite these difficulties, when looking back, many people wish that the strong family connections and simple joys of the past still existed today.
