 - b. it is a new job for him
 - c. people have problems with computers

Article Five: Touchy topics

In North America when people meet each other for the first time, they talk about things like family, work, school, or sports. They ask questions like, "Do you have any brothers or sisters?" "Where do you work?", "What school do you go to?" and "Do you like sports?" They also ask questions like "Where do you come from?" and "Where do you live?" These are polite questions. They are not personal or private.

But some things are personal or private, and questions about them are not polite. People don't ask questions about a person's salary. They don't ask how much someone paid for something. It is OK to ask children how old they are, but it is not polite to ask older people their age. It is also not polite to ask people questions about politics or religion unless you know them well. People don't ask unmarried people "Why are you single?" and they don't ask a married couple with no children "Why don't you have any children?"

9. The author of this article wants readers to _____
 - a. be very friendly to people from North America
 - b. find out a lot about North Americans
 - c. know what questions are polite in North America
10. According to this article, when meeting North Americans it is OK to ask them about their _____

 - a. "Do you come from a big family?"

- b. "Do you like to play baseball?"
 - c. "How much did your shoes cost?"
12. In North America, it's OK to discuss politics with _____
- a. married couples
 - b. good friends
 - c. older people
13. Information people don't discuss with others is considered _____
- a. "private"
 - b. "political"
 - c. "polite"

Article Six: Marking territory

In everyday language, we talk of "my place," "our home," and "their neighborhood." We think of our home as our own private territory. People need a place of their own, where they can get away from others and feel a sense of being in charge. Even within families, we attach ourselves to personal territories; for example, the kitchen tends to "belong" to the one who prepares the meals. We like to have our own workrooms and our own bedrooms, or at least our own side of the bed! People personalize their territories to emphasize where one ends and another begins.

Personalizing our territories shows how attached we feel to them. A study of American university dormitories showed how personalization of students' spaces was related to their sense of belonging to the university as a whole. The investigators counted the number of personal items in the students' rooms, such as posters, stereos, and rugs, and found that the students who dropped out had the least number of personal items on display.

The same thing is true of neighborhoods. Look around you in your own neighborhood. Look at the houses or apartments that show personalization: new fences and boundary markers, door colors that stand out from the rest, or freshly painted window frames. Noting how territories are marked should allow you to predict who is most likely to stay and become involved in the community.

14. The purpose of this article is to describe why people _____
- a. buy their houses
 - b. move to a new city
 - c. personalize their places
15. According to this article, people need to have _____
- a. places of their own
