Task 2: Read and answer the questions.The Generation Gap

In many families, parents and children sometimes disagree. This is called the generation gap. It means the difference in ideas and ways of thinking between young people and older people.

For example, parents often want their children to study hard and get a good job. But teenagers may want more free time to go out with friends or use social media. Parents may not understand the new music, clothes, or slang words that young people like.

However, the generation gap is not always bad. Both parents and children can learn from each other. Parents can share their life experience, and young people can teach parents how to use new technology. When they listen to each other, the gap becomes smaller.

1. What does the term generation gap mean?

2. Why do parents and teenagers sometimes disagree?

3. What do teenagers often want to do in their free time?

4. What can parents and children learn from each other?
