Hobbies are practiced for interest and enjoyment, rather than financial reward. Examples include collecting, creative and artistic pursuits, making, tinkering, sports and adult education. Engaging in a hobby can help you learn skills, gain knowledge and have diverse experience. Besides, hobbies also make you feel happy and relaxed.

What are hobbies for some people are professions for others: a game tester may enjoy cooking as a hobby, while a professional chef might enjoy playing and even help find problems in them. In general, a person who does something for fun (not for pay) is called an amateur or hobbyist. A person who is paid is a professional.

A simple way to tell a hobby from a job is to ask, "Can most people earn enough money to live from it?". Stamp collecting (or collecting old cigarette cards) almost never does, even though many people enjoy it, so it is commonly regarded as a hobby.

Amateur astronomers sometimes help the experts. It is not unusual for a hobby astronomer to be the first to notice a new object or event in space.

In the UK, the word anorak (a negative term) is used for someone who spends a lot of time on a hobby that many people think is boring, such as train spotting or stamp collecting. In Japan, a similar word is otaku, meaning a person who is very focused on one interest.
