The "generation gap" is a term used to describe the differences in opinions and beliefs between people of different ages. This gap can be seen in many areas of life, including politics, culture, and technology. For example, older generations may not understand the slang used by younger people, or they may have different views on social issues like same-sex marriage or climate change.

The idea of a generation gap has been around for a long time, but it became more noticeable in the 1960s. During this time, the "baby boomer" generation, born after World War II, began to challenge the values of their parents. They were known for their rebellious spirit and their embrace of new ideas and trends.

Today, the generation gap is still a significant factor in society. The United States is becoming more diverse, with more minority babies being born than white babies. This shift in demographics is creating a divide between older, mostly white generations and younger, more diverse generations. This divide can be seen in politics, where younger generations tend to be more liberal than older generations.

The generation gap can be a source of conflict, but it can also be a source of growth and understanding. By learning about the experiences and perspectives of different generations, we can bridge the gap and build stronger relationships. It's important to remember that everyone, regardless of their age, has something valuable to offer.

Question 26. What was a characteristic of the "baby boomer" generation?

- A. They embraced traditional values
- B. They were known for their rebellious spirit and new ideas
- C. They were mostly conservative
- D. They avoided any form of change

Question 27. The word "they" in paragraph 2 refers to _____

- A. Parents of the "baby boomer" generation
- B. Values of their parents
- C. The "baby boomer" generation
- D. Older generations

Question 28. According to the text, when did the generation gap become more noticeable?

- A. In the 1960s
- B. In the 2000s
- C. In the 1990s
- D. In the 2010s

Question 29. How is the generation gap affecting the United States today?

- A. The United States is becoming more technologically advanced.
- B. The United States is becoming more politically divided.
- C. The United States is becoming more economically prosperous.
- D. The United States is becoming more diverse, with more minority babies being born than white babies.

Question 30. In what way that the generation gap can be a source of growth and understanding?

- A. By focusing on the differences between generations.
- B. By ignoring the opinions of older generations.
- C. By learning about the experiences and perspectives of different generations.
- D. By avoiding conversations about politics.
