Stories about Hacking

John Draper was one of the first hackers. He discovered how to hack the U.S. phone system with ... a toy whistle, free in a box of cereal! With the whistle, Draper could make free phone calls. After an article about the discovery appeared in a popular magazine, the police arrested Draper. He didn't go to prison that time. Later Draper taught two young computer students to hack the phone system. Who were they? Steve Jobs and Steve Wozniak – the founders of Apple Computers! Draper now organizes hacking conferences.

Robert Tappan Morris was studying at college when he wrote the first computer "worm". A worm is a type of computer virus. Over 6,000 computers got the Morris worm.

10% of the computers on the Internet at that time. The Morris worm only caused computers to work slowly. It didn't take any information from them, so, he didn't go to prison. But he had to pay 10,050 dollars. Morris is now a computer science professor at a university.

Kevin Poulsen, like Draper, was interested in hacking phone systems. But he used a computer to control the phone system. One day, there was a radio competition: the 102nd person to phone the radio station won a Porsche car! Kevin used his hacking skills and won the car easily. In total, Poulsen won two Porsches, two vacations in Hawaii, and 20,000 dollars! The police tried to arrest Poulsen, but he escaped. They caught him eighteen months later while he was shopping in a supermarket. He spent five years in prison. Poulsen now writes for a magazine.
