Instructions: Read the following email exchange and answer the questions on the next page.

Email 1: Email to a Manager

Subject: Job needed: URGENT!!!

Hey man,

I saw on the company website that you are the hiring manager.

I need a job at your company ASAP. I have a business diploma, and I finished school last year. I can do any job; I don't care what it is. I am available to start immediately.

Please call me or email me back today to set up an interview. My number is 555-123-4567.

I really need a job. Need to pay bills and staff.

Thanks,

David Lee

Email 2: Reply from the Manager

Subject: Re: Job needed: URGENT!!!

Dear Mr. Lee,

Thank you for your interest in positions at Apex Dynamics.

I have reviewed your email. While we appreciate all expressions of interest, I must be frank. The approach in your email is not the most effective way to seek employment.

Our company has a formal application process. All open positions are listed on our careers page, and we require candidates to submit a tailored resume and cover letter for a specific role. Sending a generic, urgent request to a hiring manager is not a substitute for this process.

Furthermore, professional communication is highly valued here. This includes using a formal salutation, a clear and professional subject line, and explaining your specific skills rather than stating you will do "any job."

I encourage you to review our careers page and apply through the proper channels if you find a role that matches your qualifications.

Regards,

Anna Sharma
