Communication is a means through which people connect with each other in the world. It helps people express their views, ideas, and wishes to each other. Through communication, all kinds of news can be spread across the world. In the early times, people used writing as a means of communication. They used to write and send letters to each other for various purposes. People used to transfer the information verbally as well. Some kings also used to keep a messenger who used to travel all around the village to transfer the information. A list of means of communication from ancient to modern times includes hand-written letters to mobile apps' texts.

Slowly and gradually, with time, means of communication have been developed with new technologies. There are many kinds of communication, i.e., verbal, written, and gestures. Verbal communication is done by speaking with each other. A written form of communication is done via writing letters, papers, announcement boards, etc. Communication through gestures is performed by making specific gestures to each other. For example, showing your thumb to another would mean that you are saying okay.

There are two main forms of communication, i.e., Mass Communication and Private Communication. Mass Communication is communicating or connecting with the public at large. On the other hand, private communication is talking privately to your friends, parents, teachers, etc. Means of Communication are used to send any news, ideas, or message to a specific person or around the world. It is also used to receive any kind of information from a specific person or any other place. Mass Communication and Private Communication are two means of communication. Through mass communication, any kind of information can be spread in the world; on the other hand, private means of communication are used to talk to any specific person in the world. Means of communication have made sending or receiving any kind of message or information very easy and convenient.
