PRONUNCIATION: TH sounds

There are 2 TH sounds—a hard and a soft sound. They are difficult for Spanish speakers because these sounds don't exist in Spanish. Many Spanish speakers replace these sounds with the /f/ sound.

The position of the mouth/tongue is the same for both sounds—the tip of the tongue is placed between the teeth. The difference is that one sound—the hard TH—is voiced, which means the vocal chords vibrate. You can tell if a sound is voiced correctly by placing your hand on your throat when you pronounce the word; you should be able to feel the chords vibrating.

The hard TH sound is usually used in function words like this, that, them, there. The soft TH is used with content words like think, thing, theater, etc. Try record yourself saying the following words. Then record yourself saying the sentences.

- a They're both thirsty on Thursdays.
- b I think his birthday is on the fourth Thursday of the month.
- c The weather is better in the north these days.
- d This thing is worth one thousand and thirteen pounds.
- e Their mother had healthy teeth then.

Introduction

1 Look at Daniel's family tree. Read what he says about his family below and then fill the spaces using some of the words from the box. Two of the words don't fit anywhere.

brother-in-law aunt daughter ex-wife sister cousin nephew son grandmother stepmother husband niece uncle half-sister

To introduce the chapter, review the vocabulary and complete the text to the right. Use the words from the box above. Two of the words will not be used.

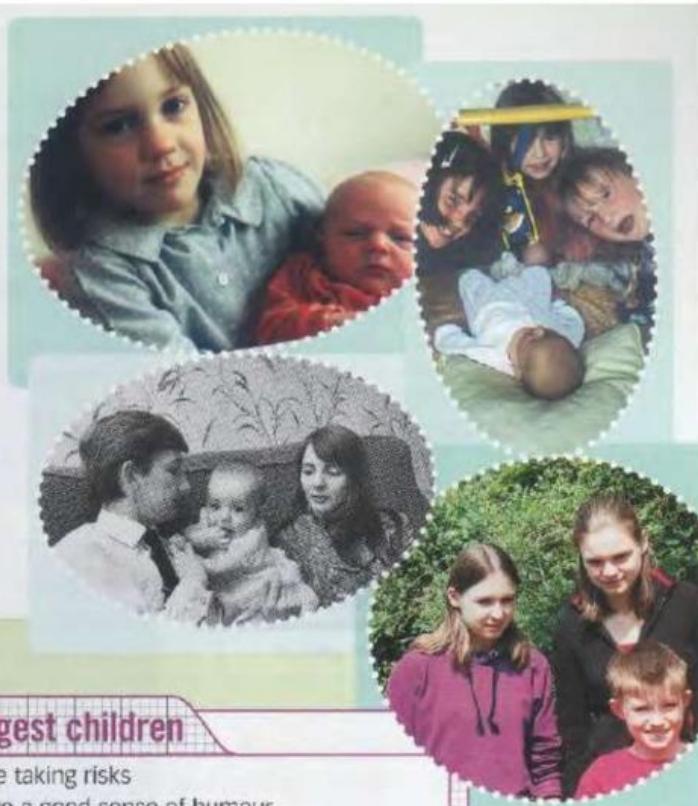

I've moved away from the town where I grew up. When I go back it's quite easy for me to visit all my relatives because most of them live in the same part of town. In fact my (a) grandmother, Lily, lives next door to her (b) Caroline. My (c) Hugh lives in the next street to my grandma and my father lives about ten minutes away, so my grandma has all her children near her. That's good because her (d) Bob, died a few years ago, so she's alone now in the house. My parents got divorced about ten years ago and my father remarried. My (e) Sarah and I weren't sure about our new (f) , Clare, at first but now we like her a lot. She and my father have one child, so I have a (g) She's called Emily. Emily is only six and I have a (h) , Leo, who is the same age. I also have a (i) called Anna. I get on really well with my (j) Nick. Sarah, Nick, Leo and Anna live in Scotland and I often visit them. I have one (k) called Michael. We used to play together a lot when we were small. Michael married young and he's divorced now but we still see his (l) , Joelle, because she's my sister's best friend.

Listening

1  Listen to four people speaking. What position are they in their families (oldest, middle, youngest, or only child)? What disadvantage does each person talk about?

Speaker	Position in family	Disadvantage

GRAMMAR: gerunds and infinitives

We have talked about gerunds and infinitives before. Let's review the rules of their use:

- Gerunds are the ING form of a verb (e.g. walking, talking, eating) used as a noun. I know that sounds confusing, but basically the word is not functioning as a verb—no one is doing the action—but rather the word is naming the action.
 - Gerunds are always used after prepositions. Examples: before eating, by communicating, through travelling.
- Infinitives are the "to-form" of the verb (to walk, to talk, to eat).
 - Infinitives are used to show purpose. It is similar to "para" in Spanish. Examples: I went to the bank to get some money. / I studied to pass the exam.
 - Sometimes the bare infinitive is used. The bare infinitive is the verb without "to". This occurs with few verbs, like make and let. Examples: She made me clean the bathroom. / My parents let me go to the party.
- Some verbs require gerunds after them; others require infinitives. This is the difficult part. To a certain degree, you will have to memorize which verb requires each. (Use the Venn diagram that I sent you previously to practice.) But the following two tips can help you.
 - Infinitives are associated with mental processes—decisions, plans, etc. Examples: We decided to go. / We planned to visit.
 - Gerunds are associated with feelings and emotions. Examples: I feel like eating tacos. / I enjoy trekking in the mountains.

Use the following exercises to practice.

Ask Anna

Dear Anna,

I'm 17 and my sister is 14 and she's really annoying. When my friends come round to my house and we want (a) to go (go) to my room and be on our own, she expects (b) (be) with us and she refuses (c) (go) away when I ask her. She always promises (d) (sit) quietly but she loves (e) (be) the centre of attention. She always spoils everything. Why doesn't she understand that I prefer (f) (be) with my friends without her?

David

Dear Anna,

My brother and I are twins. We always got on very well until we left school last year. We enjoyed (g) (do) the same kinds of things – music, sport, and we had the same friends. But my brother's now at university and lives in a hall of residence and I have continued (h) (live) at home. I really look forward to (i) (see) him at weekends when we arrange (j) (meet). But he often decides (k) (do) something with his new friends and isn't interested in (l) (see) me. What shall I do? I'm not very good at (m) (say) how I feel about things so he probably doesn't know.

Giving advice

- 1 Read the magazine's answer to one of the problems. Do you agree with it?

Dear Martin,

You should try to have a group of friends of your own so you are busy sometimes too. Why don't you join a sports club and make some new friends or ask some of your old friends to go out with you? You ought to tell your brother how you feel. I'm sure he wants to see you too but you shouldn't expect him to spend all his free time with you. You'd better learn to do things without your brother because you both have your own separate lives now. Good luck.

Anna
