The Finnish Perspective

Read the text and choose the correct answers.

When it comes to educational systems, Finland is often held up as an iconic example of excellence. With consistently high academic achievement levels, a comprehensive system of support, and a focus on creativity and critical thinking, the Finnish way of teaching is truly something special. But what makes it so successful?

One of the key features of the Finnish education system is its emphasis on early childhood learning. Children in Finland start their formal education at the age of seven and before that they have access to free pre-school. This is a major factor in the country's high academic achievement levels.

Finland also boasts small class sizes and highly-skilled teachers. The student-teacher ratio is low, which allows for individualized attention and support for each student. The teachers are highly qualified and are required to have a master's degree in education. This ensures that the students receive the highest quality education possible. Their schools are also renowned for the emphasis on creativity, critical thinking and student-centered learning. The curriculum encourages students to think independently, to ask questions and to take risks. This approach fosters a love of learning, which is an essential component of a successful education. By the way, school teachers in Finland have good salaries, with an average one of around €52,000 per year, which is a lot higher than other countries. With experience, and for the teachers who hold a position of responsibility, the salary can increase, and that fact motivates them to work well.

In addition to its strong academic focus, the Finnish education places a major emphasis on extracurriculars. From sports to music, art and drama, students participate in a wide range of activities that are important for their overall development. This holistic approach is one of the reasons why Finnish students consistently score well in international tests of academic performance. That being said, many people might be surprised to know that Finland has one of the shortest school days and school years in the world. Students typically attend school for only four hours per day. This might be contradictory to the common belief that longer school days and years lead to better academic performance. Research suggests that shorter school days and years allow for more time for students to pursue extracurriculars and for teachers to plan and evaluate their lessons, which leads to better quality education. Additionally, there's no homework assigned to students, but instead students spend more time with their families and engage in activities outside the classroom. Furthermore, the Finnish education system is one of the most equitable in the world. The government provides free education for all, regardless of their background or socioeconomic status. This ensures that all students have equal opportunities to succeed and to reach their full potential. Another unique aspect is that it does not have a school selection process. Unlike in many other countries, there is no way for parents to select which school their child attends, and students are assigned to schools based on their place of residence. This means that there is no segregation of students based on their academic abilities or social class, and all students have equal opportunities to receive a quality education.

Lastly, unlike many other countries, Finland doesn't rely on standardized testing. Instead, the focus is on formative assessment and teacher evaluations to track student progress. This approach is thought to reduce the emphasis on rote learning and test-taking, and instead encourages students to think critically and develop their problem-solving skills.

The Finnish education system is a shining example of how education can be done right and it is definitely worth studying and learning from.

Teen Earnings

Read the text and match 1 - 6 to (A-H). There are 2 extra variants you don't need to use.

As a teenager, finding a job can be a great way to earn money and gain valuable work experience. However, it can also be challenging to find a job that fits your schedule and interests. In this article, we'll explore some of the best side hustles for teens, including their potential earnings, responsibilities, and downsides.

1__ Yard work

Yard work is a great side hustle for teenagers who enjoy being outdoors and covering their green fingers with soil. Advantages include the ability to work flexible hours and the potential to earn a good hourly rate. It is worth mentioning that, the job can also be physically demanding, very messy and may include dealing with difficult weather conditions. This job would suit a teenager who is physically active and enjoys working outdoors.

2__ Delivery services

With the rise of online shopping and food ordering, there's a growing need for people to deliver groceries, take-out meals, and other items. This job can help you develop a sense of accountability and maturity because it requires a high level of responsibility. However, you may have to deal with heavy traffic. Additionally, delivery services can also help you develop your interpersonal skills when dealing with customers. This job would suit a teenager who is responsible and has a reliable vehicle.

3__ Online freelance work

There are many online platforms that connect freelancers with clients looking for various services, such as writing, graphic design, or programming. Freelance work needs a high level of skill and expertise, which can help you develop your self-confidence and self-esteem. You will also learn how to be self-motivated. Unfortunately, the job includes dealing with difficult clients and constant tight deadlines. This job would suit a teenager who is tech-savvy and has a passion for this particular skill.

4__ Selling items online

Selling items online can be a great way to earn money while using your practical talents. It requires a high level of creativity and business acumen, which can help you develop your entrepreneurial skills. You will also have to learn how to advertise your products because the online market offer is huge, so you will have to stand out to attract customers. If you don't, they will just go to other sellers, your rivals. This job would suit a teenager who is creative and has an interest in business.

5__ Event planning

Many families and companies hire teenagers to plan and coordinate events such as birthday parties, graduations, and community events. You will learn to interact with different people, such as vendors, clients, and attendees. You will also have to delegate tasks to a team of people to ensure the event is successful. However, the job is not regular and sometimes you get unexpected offers that do not fit into your schedule. This job would suit a teenager who is detail-oriented, good with time management and has a passion for planning events.

Which job:

- A would suit a highly organized teenager?
- B will give you little time to finish the task?
- C requires first-aid training?
- D is for those who don't mind getting their hands dirty?
- E will have you taking orders from a team?
- F involves a lot of competition?
- G is perfect for introverts who don't enjoy socializing?
- H requires a mode of transportation?

6__ Pet-sitting

Pet-sitting is a great way to earn money while also spending time with animals. You will not be exposed to interactions with people, which is a plus for some personality types. It requires a high level of care and attention, which can help you develop a sense of empathy and compassion. You will learn how to be responsible and how to be patient when dealing with animals.

But the job can also be physically demanding and may include dealing with pets who are sick or have behavioral issues. This job would suit a teenager who loves animals and has some experience with pet care.
