

Busy the Dog in Savannakhet

Busy was a small brown dog living in Savannakhet Province, Laos. He lived with his owner, Somchai, in a quiet village near the Mekong River. Busy got his name because he was always moving, running, and helping people.

Every morning, Busy followed Somchai to the market. While Somchai sold vegetables, Busy watched the shop carefully. If another dog came too close, Busy barked loudly to protect the goods. Many people in the market knew Busy and smiled when they saw him.

One afternoon, heavy rain fell suddenly. The road became slippery, and an old woman dropped her basket of fruit near the bus station. Busy ran to her, barked for help, and stayed beside her until people came. Thanks to Busy, the woman was safe and thankful.

Busy also loved children. After school, he waited near the school gate and walked home with them. The children often shared food with him and played games by the river.
