EL Grando the dragon

is eight metres tall and can breathe fire. But it is not a real dragon. Two artists, Paka and Dan Peppiatt, made it from recycled materials and second-hand parts to get people interested in recycling.

They used metal bars, steel pipes, plastic tubes and other spare parts to make the wings, tail, body, neck and head. The eyes are old theatre spotlights. The mouth has a wide flap of metal which can open and close. When it opens, a gas flame shoots out. The dragon moves with electric motors, which they recycled from broken wheelchairs. It can't move fast because it is very heavy. The artists are planning to install new petrol motors, which will make the dragon quicker.

El Grando first appeared during the Maker Faire in Newcastle and since then it has put on exciting shows in different places all over Britain. It raises its long neck in the air and – WHOOSH – a huge flame comes out of its mouth. If it moves towards the audience, people move back, a little nervous at first. By the end, though, they all love it and want more!

El Grando shows that recycling can be a lot of fun. It's not just about taking your cans, bottles and paper to the recycling bin. Paka and Dan Peppiatt made this amazing dragon using scrap material. Now they want to write a play with the dragon as one of the star characters. Why don't you try and make something from the things you recycle? You might create something fun and interesting like El Grando the dragon!
