A constant feature in the news is the warning that we are doing irreparable damage to the planet we live on, and there are threats of global warming and possibly even signs of it happening presently. As the environmental ambitions of many nations are peaking, the aim to reduce CO as much as possible and as quickly as possible seems to be the goal of most.

36. _____ There are dozens of recommendations that seem small in comparison to the global scale of the issue. However, what we do as individuals goes a long way to solving the issue of CO emissions. Making a daily choice to walk or bike instead of drive can have a real impact. Carpooling and public transportation can also help to reduce emissions.

37. _____Good insulation for a house is key; doors and windows are the main places where heat gets in or out. Using the sun's energy is also essential. One way to do this is to install solar panels, a trend that has taken off for water heating across most of Europe. Interestingly, using curtains, a trend that seems to have been forgotten, is being advised to help keep houses warm in the winter and cooler in the summer. Finally, we should be remembering to turn off televisions and other electrical appliances that have a stand-by function completely because they continue to use energy in this state.

38. _____ There are many different ways this industry could change. It is estimated that nearly a third of all food produced is wasted before it ever reaches the consumer. There is growing evidence from environmental studies that reducing our intake and relying on small-scale farms that produce organically grown foods are making an impact and there are clear reductions to CO output. By working with nature rather than against it, clear benefits can be seen.

39._____ The industry can be divided into two separate areas which each have distinct issues that need to be addressed. First is how people move around, getting from home to their chosen destination. Developing fuels and modernizing aircraft design are two ways that will impact the industry greatly. Second, the housing sector has similar options to reduce energy, from solar and wind energy to efficient insulation methods, as you would do at home. With a double-headed approach, there is a lot that can be done fairly quickly in this industry.

40. _____Their role is mostly one of overseeing, and, as the people in charge, many directives should come from them. The problem is global and there needs to be closer monitoring around the world. Administrations also have a requirement to report and help develop solutions to the problems faced. They should set limits and make the resources available that make change possible. They are also very important when it comes to public education.

41. What's it's name in English?

a. Nut b. screew c. wrench
